Disclaimer: We won't tell you how to cheat the act. What we'll talk about you are things you can get in trouble, along with high-profile misleading scandals that have recently happened and in the past years. We do not support makeup with no means! Let's take a look at some of these scandals, as well as make sure you are aware of all the rules and regulations of the test day so as not to unlike your scores or the possibility of college admissions. South Korea and Hong Kong: A, the case of the leaked test the most recent scandal of cheaters around the law involves the administration of 11 June 2016 of the test in South Korea and Hong Kong (or what should have been the Administration of 11 June). The officials heard that the test materials had been made in advance the test. The official statement of ACT, INC has been this: "The act has just received credible evidence that the test materials intended for administration in these regions were compromised." The result? Act, Incn has deleted the test completely, doing so only hours before the students should take the test. About 5,500 students in 56 different test centers were unable to take the test for which they had registered. While these students will receive refunds, they do not have the possibility of reprogramming their June test. Instead, they will have to wait until the next date of testing of the official law in September. At this point, it is not clear that he had his hands on the test materials act or as they did. While the act has never been canceled abroad before, the SAT has been canceled or studied several times in the last few years both in South Korea and in Hong Kong. It seems that the test centers exploit the differences of the time zone to get information from the students who take tests in the United States, unfortunately, have been the Test-Buyers of South Korea and Hong Kong who have suffered from this activity or not It was able to take the act at all on their programmed June test date. In New York: the case of false identities that fool the scandals around the ACT are not just later than abroad. In fact, the largest and most high profile scandal to date has happened in 2011 on Long Island, New York. In this case over 20 arrests have been made in which students have paid other students (most of them already at college) to take the test in their place. They paid students up to $ 3,600, and these students used fake IDs to enter the test center. When these cases of false identity were discovered, perpetrators were accused of schemes to defeat in the first degree, criminal impersonation in the second degree and falsify business records at first instance. None of these students eventually addressed prison time, but their names and this case will always be in the public record. Apparently, this type of identity exchanging was going forward for years. How to the consequence of this scandal? Now all students must load a picture of themselves when registering for the act. Would you be tempted to pay money if it meant that a perfect binder would take the act for you? Kentucky: The case of too many practice tests in 2014, the main and other school officials in Louisville had high school were investigations for the heavy assistance of students who take the act. Because the act is used in many states as a standardized high school examination, it is a high-place test for schools and administrators, as well as students. Several students reported that school officials have given substantial help during their test. Administrators allow the students to take more practice tests with real questions before entering Real answers for the real test. Furthermore, officials helped students with questions they fought and they also gave them answers, giving Louisville students an unfair advantage on the actual act. "Worse still, the students reported the administrators who tip on improper use of the computer that indicated that school officials had loaded too many information on student computers, almost How to have a "Cheat sheet" while take the act. In the end the act decided that while their actions gave students an unfair advantage, they had found a loophole in the rules and were not technically cheating. Eventually the students were released, but they were retained for a long time while the survey was in progress. While these cases of cheaters on the law have made news, most cases are less high profile. Instead, they occur because a student or a proctor test reports an unusual behavior on the test day. Let's take a look at the most common causes of ACT scores to be retained or deleted. Do not do it. What else can be disqualified from the act for the basic signs of the jar - as looking at someone else's test card, speaking, using inappropriate materials or causing disorders - they are all prohibited while they take the act. Since it is strictly timed, students cannot look back or forward in the test booklet. They cannot launch it or work on a different section than what is currently in time, nor can continue to write or fill out answers after time has been called. Once it was called the time, this is - absolutely no longer fill the bubble sheet or adding one last sentence to your essay. Otherwise the a e
