The global transition to sustainable energy has led investors to rethink their portfolios. While it will be difficult to phase out oil and gas completely anytime soon, they do not exactly offer a high growth opportunity for shareholders. At this point, alternative energies are only in their infancy and could offer investors high-growth investments. Stocks of lithium and stocks of batteries are definitely in this category. The electric car revolution means that this segment is set to expand in the years to come. It is not possible to know with certainty whether the trends in electric vehicles (EVs) will persist, but current projections indicate that the market will grow more than eight times its current size over the next decade. This opens the door to great strides, not only among the car manufacturers themselves, but also for those who supply vehicles with components. With that in mind, here's a look at seven reserves of batteries and lithium ready to benefit from the electric vehicle revolution. Romeo Power (NYSE:RMO) Albemarle (NYSE:ALB) Anglo American (OTCMKTS:NGLOY) NextEra Energy (NYSE:NEE) Livent (NYSE:LTHM) Galactic Resources (OTCMKTS: GALXF) Global X Lithium & Battery Tech ETF (NYSEARCA: LIT) Lithium Battery and Stocks: Romero Power (RMO) Source: iQoncept/Shutterstock.com Romero is a relatively new addition to Wall Street, brought to investors courtesy of a Special Acquisition Company (SPAC). It's not necessarily a bad thing, but it should sound alarm bells for prudent investors. While SPACs offer retail investors the opportunity to participate in sparkling Initial Public Offerings (IPOs), they also allow investors to trade new risky companies that are in their early stages. Romero definitely falls into this category. The group produces batteries for electric trucks, and as a relatively new company, it has not yet made a profit. It's not uncommon for a start-up company like Romero, but it adds a level of uncertainty for which investors need to be prepared. At the moment, all we need to do for RMO shares are the company prospectus and management projections. The group expects revenues to rise from $5 million in 2020 to $1.4 billion by 2025. But without further information, investors simply have to trust management's word. This is an ambitious goal, especially since a lot can happen in five years and the short-term growth of the electric vehicle market depends heavily on government support. However, for those who are willing to digest the ups and downs, Romero has potential. Mark R. Hake believes it can double in the next two or three years, so it's not a bad place to start the of battery stocks. Albemarle (ALB) Source: Igor Golovniow/Shutterstock.com If you are looking for lithium stocks, Albemarle is sure to come to the top of your search. The company's bread and butter is lithium, especially the one used in batteries for electric vehicles, and is one of the largest manufacturers in the world. Albemarle's dependence on lithium means the growing popularity of the vehicles in themselves is a catalyst for the warehouse. Some believe that lithium supplies do not meet demand over the next decade as the production of EVs ramps. So far this year, the company has been beaten by the disappointing demand - the pandemic has maintained the market for the growing as expected, which in turn hit lithium stocks that had operated the boom. The pandemic was probably a temporary hinder of the final transition to electric vehicles, however. As we return to normal, companies like Albemarle will see the wind return to their sails. The results of the Q4 of the company suggested a bounce was already materializing. In particular, the company is highly valued with a 42.5 P/E ratio, which opens the door for short-term disappointment because it suggests investors expect great things. Any mistake in the meantime could cause volatility. But ultimately, alban stocks resemble a strong choice between lithium stocks. Anglo American (NGLOY) ANGLO AMERICAN ISN TM TA Pure-play Lithium shares, but the exposure of the company to batteries and electric vehicles cannot be ignored. The Group illuminates a variety of raw materials, but platinum is of particular significance due to its use in the production of electric vehicles. The Platinum division of Anglo has delivered an increase of 28% of profits, despite the production of slowing down of the pandemic, emphasizes how valuable the precious metal has become. The Group still depends on the iron ore, but the management said it plans to push some of its thermal coal assets, which would see to be transformed into a much greener organization. Not only, but it would weigh the group's Portfolio heavily towards platinum, further exposing to a potential boom in the EV market. In particular, Anglo is not a choice of pure-play between the battery stocks, but its exposure is sufficient to offer investors the opportunity to immerse a finger of the foot in the market of EV market components. The fact that it is a miner with a diversified portfolio means that share holders cannot see the same high-ranking as some of these other companies. But on the mobile sheets, they probably did not win the minimum if there is a slide in space. Nextera Energy (NEE) Source: Madamf / Shutterstock.com From the perspective of sustainability, we really like it on Nextera Stock. The company is a leader in the battery storage industry and its market capitalization of $ 149 billion makes it a powerful player on Wall Street. Nextera Energy is also the world's largest wind and solar energy producer - making it a Linchpin in the global effort to move towards cleaner energy sources. This comes with a lot of clout while the world moves a more sustainable future - in particular with a democratic leader at the helm. President Joe Biden The administration will be an increasing tide that raises all the boats inside the space, Nextera included. The company is a pure game on renewables, and its battery storage arm is the icing on the Unlike many other list titles, the Nee titles offer a 2% dividend yield which is probably intended to continue to grow until the company can maintain a healthy cash flow. This means That investors willing to wait for the revolution to be awarded to be rewarded for their patience. Livent (LTHM) Source: GRAL / SHUTTERSTOCK.COM LIVENT is, as the name suggests, a pure lithium game. The company was part of the FMC Corporation (NYSE: FMC), and from the moment of the spin-off the shares have risen to the stars. With Biden in charge and optimism for clean-growing clean energy, Livent actions have grown over 250% in the last year. If on the one hand a monumental increase certainly raises a red flag in terms of evaluation, from the other title could further increase on the growth of the sector. Long term, Livent may have to go further if lithium demand continues to grow. Cowen analysts issued a fairly conservative rating on the title with a price target of $ 19. This is only 2% increase compared to where the title is currently exchanged at the time of publication. Ultimately, we can expect Livent joining lithium demand. If it continues to grow and the adoption of EV grows, the profits of LTHMA € 4.4 will also grow. This means that investors assume some risks if the sector should stumble, especially because the actions are already to the stars. However, if the question continues to slow down, Livent will be a great beneficiary. Galaxy Resources (Galx) of all stocks in this list, Galaxy is probably the risky. As a trading of much smaller names on over-the-counter markets, translates into a volatile choice. However, the advantage of owning a smaller name as Galaxy means that the movements towards the high are even larger. That's why many investors are willing to run the risk on penny Stock. Galaxy is a lithium miner that operates in Australia, Canada and Chile. The group was affected by a drop in demand and the news that Tesla (Nasdaq: TSLA) is developing its lithium mining resources. In the end, lithium prices will descend to demand and offer. Analysts seem to agree on the fact that, at least in the next decade, the offer will be lower than the question. Ultimately, this should give impetus to the entire sector. With this in mind, smaller players, more agile as Galaxy can see much larger movements than some of the great rivals. If you can withstand the risk, it may be worth it. ETF Global X Lithium & Battery Tech (LIT) Although not technically one or other, the Global X Lithium & Battery Tech ETF includes both lithium stocks and batteries, which makes it a € Excellent choice for those who want to invest in Without running big risks. The ETF covers all the sectors of the industry, from the extraction to the production of batteries. There, in 2021 the fund fell by 2.5% after the peak of 2020, offering investors a good entry point. The advantage of investing in an ETF on a single title is the diversity. While a company can win or lose, an entire basket of actions will offer an average of the sector. It represents a bet on the sector as a whole rather than choosing a winning horse in the battery and in the lithium race. This means that the greatest are not quite impressive, but it also removes a bit of the risk of downwards, making it a good choice for investors who want to play the EV trend but cannot stomach the ups and bass driving with. At the date of publication, the investor research personnel member is mainly responsible for this article, no position in the titles mentioned in this article, for: Fe online | 12 October 2021 8:50 aminvestors will closely look at the September inflation of September and industrial production for August. A € 4.4 - with Nifty charts 60 min, we can observe that although the index corrected by the high, it continues to trade over the period of 20 and 50 periods on the rankings of 60 minutes and is consolidating in an interval. A € 4.4 - Subash Gangadharan, technical and derivative senior analyst, HDFC titles, stated. Gangadharan said this is a healthy sign as consolidation just below the tail of life indicates that the market is building strength before a possible breakout to New Life Highs.
