By Ken Michaels, writer invited in the Shakespeare game À à €™ – "Hamlet À € à €" Polonius asks the prince À € à € "What do you do, my lord? À, à € "By no means satisfied with what he intends? Reading, replicates the hamlet, À € à € œ WWords, words, words. À, à € 1 À € à € 1 I described previously The communication model in which a sender encodes a message and then sends through some channel (or a half) to a receiver, which decodes message, and ideally understands what was sent. Certainly, The most common way of encoding a message is to choose the most appropriate words for the listener or reader. In Hamlet's case, he did not like what he read that he described elementary, as mere words, rather than a message . Then I thought I would dedicate myself a little paint to words. – Nymä à € à € à € à € à € É . – Specific words that end in NYM describe classes of words. Some of the most frequently used NYM words are synonymous (means the same that); Homemonim (has the same sound); and acronym (a word derived from the first letters of a more complex term such as diving or AIDS). Homo means À à €™ s "Same À € à €" and hetero means à €™ – "different. Therefore, if there are homemarks, it represents the reason that there are also heteronyms. While The homóvels have the same sound, but different plays (like pairs and pear), heteronyms are spelled the same, but they have different meanings and often pronunciation: a person sewing is a sewer, but a Repository for the residues is a sewer. Sewage, then, it is a heterometer. But Nym's words do not end here. One of the websites I have recently visited 1 lists no less than 26 Nym words, many of which are quite arcane and interest to relatively few. Some are frankly fun. Do we really need a word to mean another word composed of two identical parts? If yes, then tutu, papwap , yo-yo and bye tautonyms. A couple of weeks ago, my son asked me what one understands by a metal. I did not know, then Lhamos up. In retrospect, I would like to have been able to launch, as à €™ – "Meta à €" means change. A metal is a word that designates something for a word that is associated with it. For example, Hollywood is a metal used to mean the industry of the US movie image, while the crown refers to royalty, and the bottle refers to the Alcohol. My use of expression "A small ink" a pair of parades is also a metal for written communication, even when no real paint or written on paper is involved. The purpose of all this has to do, with the use of our language. It will not do me well to code a message using a word like more, or heterónim or tautào, unless I'm sure my listeners (or readers) are familiar with their meaning, or that, or I am prepared to add the definition to your benefit, in which case you may have used the definition first. Still SSIM, learn the proper use of words, however Arcane, can be useful, and if you like words, even fun. What is your language? In his book "the half-life of facts: why all we know has a date of validity," says Samuel Arbesman3 discusses the changes in language that occur over time, and the two camps that see this phenham Meno differently. He explains prescriptive grammars like those who focus on how words should be used and gramatic Like those who are more concerned about how they are used. Arbesman states that every individual develops his own set of rules on how to use words, and that all us, you and everyone - has our own personal highway. This delicious period describes our single language and speech pattern, as determined by what we learn when they are young, as well as Who is close to us and includes our gramot, vocabulary, pronouncement of words and even our accent. There is an important lesson here. If we actually communicate effectively, we need to be aware that every time we encoded a message, someone whose language is significantly different from our own can decode it in order to get à different message. Therefore, it pays to be careful with our choice of words; It's really a message, or simply – à € œ Words, words, words à € –? © 2013 Ken Michaels. All rights reserved.
